阅读理解 B

第56—60题，每题2分。

At Willow School, students used to throw away many unfinished lunches. The school tried putting up posters, but little changed. Then a group of students decided to find out why.

For a week, they stood beside the dining hall exit and asked classmates two questions: “What did you leave?” and “Why?” They discovered that some students received more rice than they could eat. Others disliked a vegetable because they had never tried it before. The problem was not simply that students did not care.

The group suggested two changes. First, students could choose a small or large serving of rice and ask for more later. Second, the cooks offered a tiny taste of a new vegetable before students chose their meal. No one was forced to finish unfamiliar food.

After a month, the kitchen measured the food left on plates again. It had fallen from 40 kilograms a day to 25. The number of students eating at school stayed almost the same. The group was pleased, but they knew one month of results did not prove that every change would last. They planned to keep measuring and ask for more suggestions.
Their experience shows that listening can be more useful than simply telling people what to do. When students help explain a problem, they can also help design a solution.

Wang discussed the experience with his classmates. They collected twelve spare umbrellas and put them on a shelf. Anyone could borrow one by writing their name and the date in a notebook. The station opened on 15 October. At first, a teacher checked it every day. After two weeks, students took turns looking after it.

By the end of November, umbrellas had been borrowed 86 times. Two were returned broken. Instead of blaming anyone, the students learned to repair them with the school caretaker. They also added a box of clean, donated school supplies.

参考答案：The kindness station shows me that small acts can help others. I plan to set up a shared school supplies corner and would like you to join us. It will be at the back of our classroom. Students should write down what they borrow and return it within two days. We will prepare the corner after school this Friday. Could you bring some spare pens and help make a sign? I hope we can make our classroom a kinder place.
